

Plagiarism: NOT Documenting Information and Quotes

Obama's Fight to Make College More Affordable

In order to fully understand the true answer behind whether or not our country should make college more affordable for everyone, one must look at the different aspects behind the issue. Is the cost of tuition and fees steadily rising? How much of college loans make up of today's educational financing? Is the so called "dream" of attending college slowly diminishing to certain people? These are all questions that must be taken into consideration in order to see how well the country is actually doing with college aid.

In the year of 2003, "the average total cost of attending a private school jumped to $26,874." This is over half of the average American family income which is ridiculous! Behind this, the average undergraduate student "racks" up student debts, totaling about $19,000. The prices of tuition and fees far exceed the affordability costs of most American people. In fact, from 2002 through 2003, tuition and fees at public colleges and universities soared by 14.1% while community colleges rose by 13.8% and private four year schools by 6%. These increases "rocket far above the actual inflation rate". The cost of tuition and fees based on today's economy is one reason why I believe that our government should make college more affordable for everyone.

Source?

Source?

Any direct borrowing not in - You've got good information here, but how close to the original language of the source is your paraphrasing